New Models in Separate Skirts

If the number of new models in separate skirts indicates the demand for them, the American woman continues unwaveringly loyal to a garment that her judgment has approved for years. Her loyalty appears to have grown into enthusiasm this spring. It is evident that the separate skirt flourishes since it has come within the influence that nourish sports clothes.

Light weight woolen fabrics and cottons of special weaves—including corduroys—are indicated in the styles now on display, as the fabrics that will endure throughout the spring and summer seasons for making these more than ever popular garments. Stripes, large and small checks, cross-bars and novel weaves, showing strong color contrasts in mixtures, have eclipsed plain cloths.

Stripes are handled with originality and cleverness. These and cross-bar materials are rarely cut on the straight of the goods but so managed that seams are on the diagonal. A few skirts are cut with several gores and the stripes matched in points at the seams. In spite of the prevalent fullness many of these skirts are smooth fitting about the hips, cut on a circular pattern that gives them ample width at the bottom and a full ripple below the hips.

The skirt shown above is made of a light weight woolen cloth in gray with white cross bar. The seam down the front is cut on the diagonal with bars carefully matched. Fullness is introduced at each side by two plaits and at the back by a triple boxplait. The double belt and the facing at the bottom are of the same material as the skirt.

These skirts are worn with short belted coats in a plain color and with silk or lingerie blouses.

Designed for the Coming Summer

A plain little everyday dress of corded madras, designed for wear in the coming summer, presents little novelty as to cut but reflects a feature or two of the styles for spring. These are seen in the lightening and lifting of the belt, in the suggestion of a square opening at the neck and in the introduction of a bit of hemstitching.

Every mother who makes her children's clothes is familiar with the advantages of this pattern in which the short sleeves are cut in one piece with the garment. Using for it the ordinary fabrics which make up the daily wear of little folks—chambrays, gingham, linen, etc.—it is possible to vary the dresses by varying the details of finishing. Combinations of striped and plain materials, the use of bright buttons, outline embroidery and the introduction of ornamental stitches in coarse yarns are much in evidence on the model dresses already on display. A variety of pockets put on in a variety of positions attest to the resourcefulness of designers in their attempts to give each dress individuality.

The dress as pictured here for the girl of five is perfectly plain except for a shaped band of white, let in at the neck with hemstitching. The belt is provided at each end with a button-hole which slips over a flat pearl button at each side of the front. Developed for a smaller child the belt is omitted and a pair of pockets set to the front may be ornamented with a dachling or rabbit or some other of the fascinations the earth holds for childhood, done in outline stitch in heavy yarn. A small patch pocket on the breast at one side is really required when the dress has no other. And speaking of fascinations, pockets are among the things which little children delight in.

For the busy mother there is a question as to the economy of making up the children's clothes at home. Every mother must settle it for herself. She will probably save time and money and strength by buying them ready-made.

Fortunate Accident.

"That there least boy of mine, Bearcat, takes after his maw's mother," stated Mr. Gap Johnson of Rumpus Ridge. "It's a lucky thing that he wasn't born a two-headed boy, or he'd shore battle himself to death."—Kansas City Star.

First and Second Wives.

The second wife is usually happier than the first because by that time a man has got all his bachelor theories about "how to rule a woman" and "how to make over a wife" out of his system.—Exchange.

Alaskan Gold Mines.

The first gold mining in Alaska was in the Juneau gold belt. More than $20,000,000 worth of gold has been produced from this region. Most of this gold has been taken from the mines near Juneau.

"Just Ticked."

The Atchison Globe vouches for the small boy, who, returning from a first dental experience, was asked, "Did it hurt?" and replied, "No, he just tickled my teeth with his little auto."

Mean Insinuation.

"Yes," said the young singer complacently. "I had a great reception after my song last night. The audience shouted 'Fine! fine!'" "Good thing you didn't sing again," said the cynic. "Why, what do you mean?" "They would have yelled 'Imprisonment!' the second time."—Stray Stories.
